

First DreamLine 30 From DL Yachts Finds Owner

DL Yachts delivered the first Dreamline 34-meter yacht a couple months ago with great interest from the industry and enthusiasts alike. The company now has a new order for the first hull in the 30-meter variant. The Italian company now has three models in that range stretching from 26-meters to 34-meters. The yacht's design –inside and out- is collaboration between DL Yachts, Arrabito Naval Architects and Enrico Gobbi of Team for Design. It might be straightforward to think that the DL30 is simply a shortened version of the DL34 but DL Yachts strongly stress this isn't the case as the 30-meter is developed on its individual platform.

The interior on the first hull sold will see an accommodation layout for guests across two decks. The lower deck will be home to four guest cabins coming in the form of two twin rooms and two double cabins according to DL Yachts deck plans. The crew cabins are located forward and towards the bow. The owner's hideaway is one deck above in the more traditional location, on deck and forward. The master suite has panoramic 180-degree views thanks to the ample windows offered. Access to the side decks and bow is made easy with door from the cabin.

The sundeck is going to be fairly spacious and will be home to the secondary helm station –located forward and starboard side-. There is also plenty of seating area for guests and the ease in opportunity for al-fresco dining under the ample seating and table provided. Under the hardtop there is great shade from the blazing sun but it can also be opened up to let in the rays with the touch of a button. Aftwards has space for a couple sun loungers too allowing this deck to be as versatile as the owner would like given the size platform. The first hull is anticipated to be ready for delivery in 2017.
